

First condition

The First Conditional is used to talk about real and possible situations in the future. It is often used to express cause and effect relationships, where one event or action leads to another. We use the following structure for the First Conditional:

If + present simple, (subject +) will + base form of the verb

Now let's look at a couple of examples to help you understand better:

“If it rains, we will stay at home.”

Explanation: In this example, “If it rains” is the condition, and “we will stay at home” is the result. If the condition (rain) happens, the result (staying at home) will also happen.

“If you work hard, you will win the promotion at work.”

Explanation: In this example, “If you work hard” is the condition, and “you will win the promotion” is the result. If the condition (work hard) happens, the result (winning the promotion) will also happen.
