

Relative clauses

We use relative pronouns to introduce relative clauses. Relative clauses tell us more about people and things:

“The developer who created this application is highly skilled in coding.”

“The project, which was delayed due to unforeseen issues, is finally back on track.”

“The code that I reviewed yesterday needs some revisions.”

“The team whose app won the award last year is now working on a new project.”

We use:

- who and whom for people
- which for things
- that for people or things.
